CORRECTIONS

In the Nov. 1 issue of the Missourian, the caption underneath the photo for the story "Faculty has first tenant" was incorrect. The photo depicted President Dean Hubbard and Carbolytic Materials Co. (LLC) CEO Raymond Riek shaking hands after signing a memorandum of understanding that secured CMC as the Center of Excellence's first tenant.

Also from the Nov. 1 issue, the correct date for "Family Guy" producer/voice actor Mike Henry's campus lecture is Thursday, Nov. 15.

"Band raises funds for travel," an article in the Oct. 25 Missourian, should have printed the cost per person for band students to travel to London this winter as $2,200.

Forums introduce students, faculty to director candidates

By Lindsay Jacobs
University News Editor

The search for a new Campus Activities director is coming to an end.

Forums were held Tuesday and Wednesday to allow Northwest students, faculty and staff to meet the candidates and have their questions answered.

On Tuesday, Interim Campus Activities Director Angel McAdams Prescott, and presented the goals she has if she gets the position and answered student, faculty and staff questions. At the end of the forum she asked those in attendance how they see the Campus Activities Office now and how they would like to see it run.

Wednesday, Bobbie Delaney took her turn answering student, faculty and staff.

McAdams Prescott is a Northwest Graduate and during her time as a student she was active.

After graduation McAdams Prescott got a job at the University of Arkansas where she was the first student activities director. From there she moved to Pittsburgh State University where she got a job in student activities and started seeking her master's degree in communication with an emphasis in organizational development.

While there she found similarities in Pitt State and Northwest.

"In some ways it was like coming home," McAdams Prescott said.

Delaney received her bachelor's degree from Western Illinois University in individual studies and her master's degree from Grand Valley State University.

Delaney has worked at Iowa State University as a residence hall director and is currently a residence hall director at Missouri Western State University.

If she gets the job, McAdams Prescott said she is looking forward to advance the Encore Series and Distinguished Lecture Series and looking forward to supervising and mentoring the staff in the Campus Activities Office.

McAdams Prescott told those in attendance she is wanting to get more student feedback with the Encore Series as well as reconstructing the selection committee to involve the campus

MEMORIES OF SERVICE

Veteran remembers his volunteer efforts in China

By Dominic Genetti
Community News Editor

His face has aged, his hair gone white, but through his bright blue eyes, George Gayler has seen the world.

A veteran of World War II, Gayler served in China with the United States Air Force delivering and picking up everything from supplies to soldiers.

Despite everything occurring over 60 years ago, the things he experienced are still fresh in his mind.

"I got there in November of '43 and got back December of '45," Gayler said.

While many were drafted into the war, Gayler volunteered after the attack on Pearl Harbor.

"Call it patriotism I guess," he said. "I wanted to be in the Air Force."

A student at Western Illinois in Macomb, Ill., Gayler was dating the woman who eventually became his wife when he considered joining the military.

"We met the week I was at school," Barbara Gayler said. "I was wanting a date, becoming a man. I found out afterward he was very interested in music, but it had never reached his feet."

After enlisting, George left Macomb and was sent to San Antonio, Texas for cadet training.

"It was a new experience," George said. "I didn't like it at all."

Traveling all across the Lone Star State for training, George spent time at a base near Amarillo, Texas to be a flight instructor.

"No experience of being a flight instructor, but I managed," he said.

Eventually, George got word he was going overseas, the notice came just three months after his marriage to Barbara.

"You knew that was going to happen," Barbara said. "It was happening to all fellows of that age who were in service."

As for George, he had no idea where he was going.

"I took a train from Chicago to Newport News, Va. and from there, we got on a boat and went across the Atlantic," George said.

"My guess was Italy, boy was I wrong."

George and his fellow troops traveled all over Europe before arriving in India.

"When we landed at Bombay, we got on a train immediately," he said. "Very interesting experience all the way across India."

Ending their travels at a U.S. base in western China, George and the flyboys were able to get to work.

The troop carrier squadron I was in, the job was to carry anything that needed to be flown in, George said. "They flew mules, ammunition, gasoline, food, mainly rice, troops."

CIRCUIT COURT

Espey wants lawsuit against him dismissed

By Sean Comer
Politics/Courts Reporter

Nodaway County Sheriff Ben Espey and a Conception Junction man both await a ruling deciding a sex offender registration controversy.

Attorney Robert Sundell petitioned circuit court judge Roger Prokes Oct. 15 to rule that Johnny R. Rich, of Conception Junction, does not have to register as a sex offender in the state of Missouri. The action names Espey as defendant in his capacity as Nodaway County Sheriff.

Upon Rich's relocation to Conception Junction from Florida in 1995, Espey informed him the law required him to register as a sex offender based on a May 1992 no contest plea to attempted sexual battery in Orange County, Fla.

Rich was prosecuted in 2004 for failing to register, as admitted in Sundell's petition. The State dismissed the case based on Rich's defense arguing that the Florida charges did not require registration under Missouri law. In addition, Missouri does not require sex offenders convicted before Jan. 1, 1995, to register with the state.

Nodaway County prosecutor David Baird filed a motion Oct. 24 on behalf of Espey to dismiss Sundell's petition.

Baird's motion states that Espey has only followed the instructions given by the Missouri State Highway Patrol, which maintains the Missouri Sex Offender Registry.

Baird's petition further stated that Rich "has failed to state a claim upon which relief can be granted."

Missouri State Highway Patrol lieutenant Edward Aylward quoted Missouri Revised Statute 589.400 as declaring that a registered sex offender in any state — regardless of the offense's status under Missouri law — would require the offender to register.

Rich has since been advised by the Nodaway County Sheriff's Department that he can be arrested for failure to register, according to Sundell's petition.

Sundell had not returned phone calls for comment as of press time.

Neither Espey nor Baird were at liberty to comment on the respective actions.

Prokes has not stated whether the petition will be dismissed or when he will make a ruling.

CENTER OF EXCELLENCE

Two companies sign on as facility's first occupants

By Evan Young
Managing Editor

After three years with no genuine occupant for the Center of Excellence, Northwest, within the course of one week, has officially booked two companies for the facility's business incubator.

The University signed a memorandum of understanding with Carbolytic Materials, Co. (LLC) of St. Louis on Oct. 25. It signed a similar agreement Nov. 2 with a second company.

For competitive reasons, the second company's name and specific business field remains confidential. However, it should begin operating out of the Center by late 2008, Northwest President Dean Hubbard.

The Center's second tenant had reasons similar to CMC for wanting to operate out of northwest Missouri, Nodaway County Economic Developer Lee Langerock said.

"We just have a lot to offer. That was the draw," Langerock said. "The principal draw for this company was the experience the professional staff has to offer, the chance to work with students and the connection with the community."

Combined, the two companies will bring in about 25 new jobs with average salaries of $30,000 to $35,000 to the community, plus other high-

CMC specializes in manufacturing ApexCM from shredded tires. ApexCM is a substance that makes tires black and reinforces them and other rubber and plastic products.

The substance can be used as an alternative to the less environmentally friendly carbon black, which is produced by the incomplete combustion of oil and natural gas.

CMC also uses its technology to recover and recycle the "ingredients" of rubber products — including oil, gas and ApexCM.

Once known as the Center of Excellence for Plant Biologics, the facility lost previous prospective tenants Ventria Bioscience and Edenspace Systems Corp. over the past two years, partially because of funding uncertainties.

More than $24 million in state money will fund the building's construction and completion through Gov. Matt Blunt's Lewis and Clark Discovery Initiative. Northwest received the first installment of these funds three weeks ago and will receive the remainder over the next five years.

Phase I of construction, exterior design, is complete, and the next phase, interior design, is underway, University officials said.

CONSTRUCTION

Campus to build $6 million worth of facilities

By Shane Sherwood
Chief Reporter

New buildings will soon house many different services around campus. The first to find a new home is the shops building.

The Board of Regents approved $6 million to be used over seven years to help construct new buildings for different campus services. These include Environmental Services, Campus Safety and Purchasing.

The $6 million will be taken from the maintenance and repair budget starting with the 2006-2007 budget and ending with the 2012-2013 budget.

The University hopes to have these buildings finished within four years, Finance and Support Services Vice President Ray Courter said.

During the past several years, a planning team consisting of staff, administrators and architects have been designing a series of projects, which would replace outdated and poorly designed office and storage areas, Courter said.

The new buildings will be located around the Materials Distribution Center.

Services currently using these buildings include shops, grounds, transportation and storage compartments that were recently located in the Valk Building, lower level.

Everything must be moved out of the lower level of Valk for the classrooms to be built, Environmental Services Associate Director Dave DuVall said.

Goals for the project include a new transportation maintenance building, a new fueling station, new shops building that includes storage facilities, a new building for Campus Safety, a new addition to the Materials Distribution Center to accommodate the Mail and Copy Center, and new parking for rental vehicles.

Construction should begin by Summer 2008 on a new shops class building, Courter said.

"The inside of the shops building will be helped by shop students," DuVall said. "Our philosophy is it's your home you help build it."

The current shops building cannot be painted because of the materials it is constructed out of and the edges of the entrances rust, Courter said.

The bathrooms in the building will be built with solid construction material to help in case of weather and emergencies, DuVall said.

The transportation building will start construction in Fall 2009, Courter said.

The building must be constructed with heavy concrete. A set of above ground fuel tanks must accompany the building. Roads must be built to accompany access to the acquired areas and access into the area for the new buildings.

Funding started from the 2006-2007 budget. It will be used from the maintenance and repair budget, Courter said.

Twenty-eight years of experience separate Northwest Communication, Theater and Language professors Theo Ross and Merce Decker.

However, their outlooks and perspectives on their careers are remarkably similar, despite the fact Ross was giving lectures before Decker was born.

Students, student interaction, student centered — Ross and Decker gave all of these responses when asked about the positive aspects of their teaching careers.

"I chose an occupation where the interaction was with humans instead of widgets," Ross said.

Ross began his teaching career at Northwest in 1978. After only a year his office was destroyed in a 1979 along with the rest of the Administration Building and surrounding theater departments.

He worked with the Theater Department as it rebuilt the program from scratch, said Ross.

This spirit has kept growing throughout the years with additions of many clubs and organizations and increased enrollment, Ross said.

The Forensics Team is always welcoming new members, said Decker.

Both Decker and Ross agreed the atmosphere around campus is very friendly. They both also wanted to spend more time with their students.

There is great frustration when a class discussion has to be cut short or a one-on-one meeting with a student has to be postponed because of lack of time, Decker said.

Both professors' concerns and focus were centered on the students and what is best for them.

SAC presents first speaker of the year

Voice of 'Family Guy,' Mike Henry to speak, followed by autograph session

By Lisa Houtchens
Missourian Reporter

The voice may sound vaguely familiar.

Mike Henry, voice of many characters on the hit series "Family Guy," will present the first Student Activities Council lecture of the year. The lecture will be at 7:30 p.m., Thursday, Nov. 15, in the Charles Johnson Theater.

Henry has been working on "Family Guy" since 1999. He vocalizes the characters of Cleveland, Herbert, and others, according to Greater Talent Network, a celebrity speakers bureau.

Wesley Miller, SAC Lecture chairman contacted the Greater Talent Network and worked out an agreement for Henry to speak at the University, Miller said.

Henry's agent, Jessica Fee, gave a list of names of possible speakers, which were on the venue.

"One of the names she (the agent) did give me was Mike Henry," Miller said. "There are a lot of people interested in 'Family Guy.'"

SAC President Kelli Farris knows the popularity of "Family Guy" and the crowd that will be drawn in.

"Family Guy" is a very popular name and a very popular show now ... being tied to "Family Guy" will help," Farris said.

The series has been around since 1999 on FOX. It is a popular show that has been around for a while, according to the Greater Talent Network.

Farris makes sure there are no over bookings with other SAC events or other campus events. Farris doesn't get too involved in the actual planning of the events.

"They (chair members) run the show ... they need the experience," Farris said.

Looking at the budget SAC decided they could afford to host Henry. An agreement was signed and the Charles Johnson Theater was booked, Miller said.

There is a lot of work that goes into planning these events. They start booking acts through SAC for the lectures during the summer by looking at the names, Miller said.

The event is open to all the community and Northwest students. There will be a Q-and-A session after. A box will be at the door where questions may be written down and then will be asked by the chairs at the end of the show, Miller said.

Audience members are welcome to bring any memorabilia to have autographed and photos will be allowed.

Up 'til Dawn surpasses expected participation

By Netta Hall
Missourian Reporter

Staying up all night -- college students do it all the time; whether it's for studying or partying, it happens.

Over 100 Northwest students stayed up late Wednesday night for another reason: to help in the fight against childhood cancer.

St. Jude Children's Research Hospital's Up 'til Dawn All Team Meeting was held Wednesday night.

Up 'til Dawn is a nationwide collegiate program that raises awareness and money for St. Jude's, according to its Web site.

St. Jude's is the largest pediatric cancer research hospital in the world, unique in the fact that families are never charged for their treatments and the research is shared with the medical community around the world. Since St. Jude's opening in 1962, the cure rate for the most common form of cancer has increased from 4 percent to over 90 percent, according to St. Jude's Web site.

With all the free treatments and expensive research, it costs more than $1.3 million per day to run St. Jude's, according to its Web site. Students across the nation are taking an active part in raising funds to help offset these costs.

Teams consisting of six people work together to raise funds. Up 'til Dawn Executive Director Jenny Harrison said. Each member had to get 50 addresses of people and fill out a "50 Names Fast" sheet, she said.

The teams stayed up late Wednesday night, writing letters to the people asking for their support and donations to St. Jude. Up 'til Dawn Assistant Director Amanda Davis said. Up 'til Dawn pays for the postage of the letters, she said.

"This year, our lofty goal for the number of teams was 75. We were blown away when we realized we had 103 teams of six people," Up 'til Dawn Entertainment Director Kayla Scott said.

None of the surrounding schools have as much participation as Northwest, Scott said.

"We are extremely excited that so many people are participating in Up 'til Dawn," Harrison said. "Ten percent of our campus is taking an active part."

Jenny Harrison, Up 'til Dawn Executive Director

The top-raising school for last year's Up 'til Dawn only had 9 percent of student participation, Harrison said.

The All Team Meeting is the biggest fund-raiser for Up 'til Dawn, Davis said.

"It's basically a giant late night party. Entertainment, fun, and a little work — all for a great cause," Harrison said.

Business honors farming families in award banquet

American agricultural families of Missouri will be honored throughout the community at the 47th Annual Farm-City Banquet, Nov. 12.

The banquet will be held at the Student Union Ballroom at Northwest and will have a guest speaker, an award ceremony and a silent auction to represent the significance of agricultural families.

Guest speaker Eric Chamberlain, (project manager of Wind Farm Operations) will explain how farmers can benefit from new cash group by wind energy production as local farmers are awarded for their innovative ideas and contributions.

We have had veterans in the past along with producers and grain farmers as well as cattle farmers,'" Westfall said.

"Two participants will be awarded this year. One of the two winners cannot be revealed due to ceremony procedure but the late Robert Alexander of Hopkins will be recognized," Westfall said.

Tickets for the banquet are $15 and are available at Bank Midwest, Bank and Trust, Nodaway Valley Bank and the Chamber of Commerce Office.

"Awards will be given to an outstanding farm family, woman, youth, farm advocate and conservationist as well as to the new member of the Hall of Fame," Luke said.

The Hall of Fame award, is given to community members who have made significant contributions to agriculture as well as active involvement in the community. There will be 45 members of the Hall of Fame.

Ladybugs take over

Insects seeking winter shelter

By Dominic Genetti
Community News Editor

They're everywhere.

Ladybugs are being seen on buildings, windows, in rooms and most of all buzzing in front of lights.

Becoming quite a nuisance for some, many are left wondering, what's the deal?

Northwest entomology instructor Rego Jones said it's because winter is approaching.

"They're becoming a pest because they're looking for places to hibernate," he said.

Officially named the Asian Lady Beetle, ladybugs are trying to stay in warmer temperatures.

Many ladybugs will typically be found on south side of buildings absorbing sunlight and warmth Jones said.

"Typically they'll congregate towards area of light color, commonly you'll find them on limestone cliffs," Jones said.

Ladybugs have been seen on many buildings throughout Maryville and the Northwest campus. A large number of them are found roaming the University's Memorial Bell Tower in the afternoon.

"They're beneficial insects that feed on other insects," Jones said.

Ladybugs are present mainly in soybean fields, said Thomas Sappington, a research entomologist at Iowa State University.

"This time of year, you get a flux of them coming out of the soybean fields as they're harvested," Sappington said.

However, ladybugs won't be in the way much longer.

"Over winter, they typically will crawl into cracks and rocks, crevasses, trees, anywhere they can get into to survive," Jones said.

Like many mammals, ladybugs will sleep for the winter.

"When spring season comes up, they'll emerge from hibernation," Jones said.

LOCAL DEVELOPMENT

Moving to the future

NODAWAY COUNTY is currently constructing a new administration building on the Nodaway Square in Maryville. The building is being constructed at the corner of Fourth and Market streets.

County constructing administration building

By Micheal Clements
Missourian Reporter

A new administration building for Nodaway County will be completed in 2008.

The construction site at Fourth and Market streets will hold all county offices currently residing in the courthouse and County extension office.

County Commissioner Joe Baunli said the project has been a 20-year effort. The lots for the building were bought 12 years ago.

"In 1986 the idea was created that something was going to have to happen because this building was obviously getting some age," Baunli said.

The new building will be 48,000 square feet with three floors allowing room for future expansion if needed and will hold the district juvenile office, County Commissioner Bob Westfall said.

We could have done something smaller but when you look at the needs of the county and what it's going to be in the future it seems like everything that's built around here in ten years, they have to add on," Westfall said.

The building will have space in the lower level to combine all the county records County Commissioner Bob Stiens said.

"There are a lot of records that need to move from the annex and here at the courthouse," said Stiens.

The building has space available for a 9-1-1 call center and offices for the sheriff's department whose offices are currently crowded at the county jail.

Funding for the building comes from money the county has saved, taxes and the sale of the Nodaway County farm. The county has about $1.6 million available currently, including funds from selling the county farm.

"This year we sold the county farm for some more funds because we didn't think the farm was something we needed at this time," Westfall said.

The county explored using the old Wal-Mart building on South Main before beginning construction on the new administration building.

County Assessor Rex Wallace rallied for moving to the old Wal-Mart building because of cost and parking. "There is no parking available near the new building Wallace said.

"It is definitely going to give us some more space," Wallace said. "The sad thing is and what I've argued the whole time is No. 1 the cost factor."

The projected cost for the new administration building is more than five million dollars.

"Every tax payer in the county is going to a small share, and it's a very insignificant amount considering the immensity of the project," Baunli said.

The location of the old Wal-Mart building was ideal and less expensive, Wallace said.

"The Wal-Mart building would not be feasible for the County," Baunli said.

"I looked at it and visited with the corporation that owns that building, the building was probably not feasible for us because it was going to be a several year project to buy it," Baunli said.

"It is definitely going to give us some more space, the sad thing is and what I've argued the whole time is number one the cost factor, Wallace said. "I tried getting us over to the Wal-Mart building because of the location and the parking. There is no parking at that location."

The city of Maryville has come forward to work with the county on the parking issue in the downtown area.

"Parking is a precious commodity in any downtown area and there is not enough parking now but we are not diminishing any parking," Baunli said.

The county spent $12,000 to remodel offices in the courthouse three years ago.

"I have the nicest office in the courthouse and I have plenty of room and I'm very satisfied," Wallace said.

Rena: I think (morality) play some role.

I know I would base my opinion on who represents what I believe. I also think people just aren't as educated now as what they were before and they don't know who the candidates are, so they just pick a name rather than a person and what they believe in.

Why younger voters don't vote ... Rena: I think a lot of people our age, especially in the early 20s, they don't really vote because they don't think it'll make a difference. You hear about it all the time. Voting to them just isn't as big to them as it is to people in their 30s, 40s and so on, because they just really don't know the political world yet. They don't think things are going to change if they do vote.

When they do vote and they get in the habit of voting, they understand "I voted for this issue and it went through" or "I don't like this, so I want to change it."

Marjorie: It seems to me like they tried to educate the younger people — the people in college and high school — that they should vote and that if there's things they dislike, it's their fault if they don't vote.

Generations share common political, social perspectives

By Sean Comer

Marjorie Wade interrupted an afternoon of reading to help make sense of nearly a century of politics.

At 96, Wade, a retired teacher, is one of Nodaway County's oldest registered voters. Her son makes sure she receives an absentee ballot at Parkdale Manor Nursing Care Center for every year's election.

Wade sat reclined in a chair next to the bed where Northwest senior Rona Stockdall sat, read to share her generation's political perspectives.

Stockdall, a self-described "liberal democrat," compared the sentiments of her generation with those of Wade, a self-described "strong republican" who witnessed many historic American turning points first-hand.

The role the media have played in politics ...

Marjorie: I just don't like the idea of people in our country going against the person that's been elected our leader.

I think it's bad for the opinion of foreign countries, to look at the United States and see they don't trust their leader.

Rona: I think our media looks for things that are bad and they're going to report on those, because those are what people are more likely to read than the good things.

Changes in key issues and the importance of morality ...

Marjorie: The morals is one thing that I always think about.

Accountability important for all media members

Although this editorial usually deals with what goes on at Northwest or in the Maryville community, this week the Northwest Missourian just can't ignore our neighbors to the south, Missouri Western State University.

Over week ago the Griffin News, Missouri Western's campus newspaper, ran a staff editorial titled "Have some respect, this isn't High School."

The editorial addressed a number of issues, from vandalism in the Student Union, to a scuffle that broke out at a recent convocation. All of these acts according to the editorial are "reportedly coming from one minority."

Obviously the paper set off racial tensions with this blatant profiling, and a week ago the St. Joseph News-Press ran an article on how students responded at the following NAACP's meeting.

While the newspaper might have had good intentions by calling out the students' disrespect of their university's campus — proving your point through racial profiling is never acceptable.

This is definitely not the first, or the last, time a college newspaper gave college media a bad reputation.

In September Colorado State University's newspaper, Rocky Mountain Collegian, grabbed national headlines with a headline that included a four-letter word after the Taser incident at Florida State University.

Sensationalism sells, but is that really what you're after?

Honest, hard working journalists are needed now more than ever. In a world where mega media corporations are allowed to own more and more news outlets, where the "media" are under constant attack and where more people care more about celebrity news than politics, it is important for journalists to do their job.

It shouldn't make a difference if you're writing an editorial for the opinion page, or if you're writing a news story for the front, accountability is always necessary.

Spreading rumors in times of crisis does no good

By this time, we all know about the gun-fire incident that took place on campus over homecoming weekend.

We now know that shots were fired somewhere near the High Rise Dormitories and the Station and that nobody was injured.

With all the facts of the incident in mind, most of us are turning our attention to the handling of the event — from the initial shot until the investigation of the suspects.

Perhaps a bigger cause for concern, other than the crime itself, is the way people both on and off campus initially handled the situation.

Sarah York and Jeff Kanger
Contributing Columnists

It is human nature for groups of people to collectively overreact to stressful situations, but we still need to be rational in times of crisis, regardless of how small. We heard rumors of dead bodies and shooting spears, when all that happened was a couple of shots fired with no reported injury. The lesson here — get the facts before you panic. Nothing makes a dangerous situation even more dangerous like rational people losing their heads. Anyone on campus at the time of the incident knows that Campus Safety and school officials took the occurrence very seriously — and rightfully so, considering the grave importance of campus safety in the wake of tragedies like the Virginia Tech massacre.

We have heard people criticize the school for locking down campus facilities, including residence halls, because they felt inconvenienced by the whole procedure.

Criticizing campus officials for being thorough in the interest of student safety makes almost as much sense as running up and down Fourth Street screaming about a crazed gunman on campus. The bottom line is that the situation was handled rather poorly by some students, but very well by Campus Safety.

Though we certainly hope that the school will be able to handle this event, we also hope that people can maintain their composure, act like rational adults and allow school officials to do their jobs, whether it creates an inconvenience for us or not.

I personally feel that you are the most immature person, and the worst writer I know. How can someone with such strong opinions be so dumb? It amazes me how you think it is right to constantly bash and demoralize great organizations such as SAC, or our PRESIDENT of our University... Dr. Hubbard... I definitely feel that your immaturity is the key root of IGNORANCE. Grow up! We are in college, not sixth grade.

Hey guess what, WM, you are exactly the type of person he is writing about in the article. I would like to thank you on Your Man's behalf for proving his point. Thank you and have a nice day!

Are you serious?

Do you think your funny? Your articles are a complete waste of space and I honestly think a couple brain cells die everytime I read one of them. I do enjoy reading all of the comments about how bad you suck though. I don't know why a newspaper with such a good reputation would print your crap. It's not a matter of ignorance, your stuff is just stupid and completely immature. I agree with WM, grow up.

I haven't been at Northwest for that long, but I always thought the point of the stroller was to be a fun thing of things. I happen to think it's friggin' hilarious, and one of the reasons half of my floor reads the paper any way. Keep going with the immaturity. A little humor in life keeps people grounded.

I agree with Amused Alumni that WM looks like a moron arguing with Your Man about the exact thing he is picking fun at. Do you even read the stroller? Stop getting so worked up about a little bit of bad language. Seriously, there are more important things going on to worry about than a campus newspaper. If this is what you do in your spare time? Comment on line on student stories?

I also love reading the comments. People get so worked up over a piece of humor writing. Nice job Man.

As a former student of Northwest (91) I would just like to point out that the stroller has always been a satire piece. It's amusing to see, as others have stated above, that people think this is the first time the stroller has been under attack. From my experience reading the paper, the stroller's one and only job is to stir the pot and (maybe) get some laughs along the way. All you have to do is look at the "recently commented" and see that obviously it's working. Good work.

Graduates buried by debt

By Patricia Alex
The Record (MCT)

It's no small thing to make it to the top of one of U.S. News and World Reports' college lists. But the folks at Seton Hall University aren't exactly celebrating their No. 1 national ranking for student-loan debt.

Sixty-one percent of students graduating from the South Orange, N.J., campus have to pay back student loans — the average totaling $37,724, according to America's Best Colleges 2008. The numbers are high but they are not an aberration. Nationally, nearly two-thirds of graduates of four-year schools have debt, according to the Project on Student Debt. That debt load averages $20,000.

New federal measures are expected to ease some of the burden going forward. But, for now, student debt — which is destined to have more than doubled in the last decade — has a stranglehold on many students and families.

Tom White, a spokesman for Seton Hall, said the university and other Catholic schools don't have a history of amassing large endowments.

"Fund-raising for scholarships is never to Catholic schools — we never saw ourselves as a charity," White said. "The debt load is high, we can't dispute that." But he said efforts are under way to address the issue. "We're just finishing a $150 million fund-raiser and $24 million will be endowed for scholarships."

Tuition at Seton Hall is more than $27,000 and living expenses add $10,000 to the tab. Part of the cost issue has to do with being located in an expensive part of the country, said White.

"We're not making excuses, just trying to put it in context," he added.

Another area school, New York University, comes in a close second on the U.S. News list, with 61 percent of graduates carrying debt, averaging $34,417.

Advocates are hoping the new federal college cost reduction act will help rein in indebtedness. Interest rates will be federally subsidized student loans will be cut in half over the next four years and opportunities are available for loan forgiveness for those who go into some public service jobs under the new legislation.

MY VIEW

Pakistan's future depends on Bush's choices in counterterrorism

On Saturday, Pakistani President, Gen. Pervez Musharraf, declared a state of emergency in response to the Pakistan's Supreme Court's release of 60 people accused of terrorism. Musharraf declared that the judiciary branch went beyond its boundaries when the courts urged that the accused' civil rights be protected.

The state of emergency included numerous arrests, the removal of communication in Pakistan, a suspension of the constitution as well as the suppression of privately owned media channels. Not only this, but it also prompted severe riots when lawyers cried out against the sweeping authority given to the police that led to the suspension of basic civil liberties, including the right to assembly and freedom of speech.

Although Musharraf's excuse was to end terrorism in Pakistan, critics claim that this is not the case, but rather to gain more personal power by silencing the Supreme Court before it could have ruled that his re-election by parliament would be invalid while he was still army chief.

Before I go into the possible consequences of such an action, such as civil war, the fragmentation into smaller states or even another coup, I must first delve into the history of Pakistan so it might be made more explicable.

Pakistan is separated, geographically speaking, in two main parts: where the main population resides, the Indus River Valley, and where the division of ethnicity runs deep and strong, the mountainous regions. Pakistan, therefore, is a state, not a nation, bound by its faith, but also divided by its many forms. Pakistan began as a state in crisis, founded upon the battle between secularism and religion, leading to a breakdown in the parliamentary system early on and held together by the army.

Now, if the Pakistan state tried to create a nation, it would have to be founded upon the strength of the army. You can view this as a human body. We are allowed to sit, or stand firm, by our spine. If the spine were to be removed, we

Kathleen Wilmes

I do not believe Musharraf continues to wear the army general uniform to gain more power, but rather to represent the unity that acts as the spine, holding Pakistan together.

But how does this affect the United States? Why is President Bush warning Musharraf not to be able to sit or stand on our own. We would collapse. The army is the spine of the Pakistani body. Once it is removed, the country collapses. As long as the militant body of Pakistan remains united, the country is less likely to fall prey to inside forces that could tear it apart.

If viewed in this context, Musharraf's declaration of emergency rule is quite acceptable. Pakistan is a divided country with the ability to fall prey to sundering itself. The army is the body that goes beyond all these divisions, symbolizing unity.

against such actions? The answer stems from the after-shocks of Sept. 11.

Thus far, Pakistan has proved to be a great ally in the War on Terrorism. The United States gives billions of dollars in aid to continue this alliance. This brings Bush deep within the conflict, leaving him with two options.

First, Bush could sever financial aid to Pakistan. But what would be the consequence of such an action? It would greatly undermine the efforts of counterterrorism.

Second, Bush could continue to support the Musharraf government. But that would only bring more criticism from human rights advocates, as well as scorn among critics of the President's "freedom agenda," a policy to advance democracy around the world, mainly in the Middle East.

If Delaney gets the job, she wants to get more students involved in activities planning, and find new and creative ways of spreading the word about upcoming events.

When she arrives on campus she wants to walk around and introduce herself to offices and get them involved in Campus Activities.

She is also interested in working with the Distinguished Lecture Series and Encore performances. Delaney also wants to celebrate diversity with everything the Campus Activities Office plans.

Meanwhile back in Illinois, Barbara worked as a small town schoolteacher. Saving every penny, she stopped at the post office every morning for letters from George.

"He wrote very faithfully," she said.

Barbara felt she didn't have to worry much considering combat in Europe was worse than China.

"You just had to assume that he was all right," Barbara said.

For George, getting the job done was a large concern, even on Christmas Day. When most are opening gifts, George was flying plane. "I didn't think about it," he said. "I think on Christmas Day in China, we had missions to fly, so it really didn't mean that much to most of us."

However, being away from his home, wife and family, had an emotional effect.

"I missed, of course, being away from home and it did occur to me, once in a while, I might not get back," George said. "Things like that did bother you a little bit."

Time went by and before he knew it, his tour of duty was over. Coming home had an emotional feel too.

"One of the things that hit me, as much as anything, was sailing in New York Harbor and seeing the Statue of Liberty," George said.

Several train trips later, Barbara was back in his arms.

"He had a very yellow complexion because of all the medication they were giving them," Barbara said.

Other than that, nothing was different about her husband. He was still the skinny blond-haired man she married just a short time ago.

Next to seeing his wife and family, George had something else on his mind: graduate school.

Money that Barbara saved helped pay George's way through school at the University of Indiana.

With a baby and a family to support, George desperately needed a job following graduation.

"I sent out letters to a whole lot of Midwest schools and the only place I got a positive answer was Maryville, Mo.," he said.

George packed his family and moved to Maryville where he got a job at Northwest teaching history. He taught until 1987 when he retired.

"I wouldn't have left for anything," George said.

Rare comet comes into view, should last next few months

By Tina Hesman Saey
St. Louis Post-Dispatch (MCT)

Look. Up in the sky. Is it a plane? Is it a fuzzy star?

No. It's Comet Holmes.

The comet has been exciting astronomers and amateur skywatchers since it burst into view two weeks ago. It's one of trillions of objects that circle the outer reaches of the solar system, usually unnoticed.

For more than 100 years, Holmes has been invisible to the naked eye, but now you can see it in the northeast sky, even where city street lamps drown out starlight.

The comet is so far away that usually only the most powerful telescopes are able to detect it, said Erika Gibb, an astronomer at the University of Missouri-St. Louis. The closest Comet Holmes gets to the sun is twice the distance from the Earth to the sun, she said.

Suddenly, after midnight on Oct. 24, the comet grew brighter, attracting the attention of amateur astronomers in Spain and then around the world.

Astronomers now know that a cloud of dust exploded from the comet. Sunlight reflecting off the dust particles gives the normally dim comet its extra wattage.

Astronomers classify celestial objects according to brightness. The larger the number, the dimmer the object.

Humans can see objects as dim as magnitude 6, Gibb said. In July, Comet Holmes was a dark magnitude 14.5. It reached a blazing 2.7 last week, she said. Each step is a hundredfold change in brightness, Gibb said.

This isn't the first time Comet Holmes has staged such an outburst. The first time was in November 1892.

That time, the comet flared to magnitude 4 or 5, bright enough for English astronomer Edwin Holmes to discover it.

Two months later, it flared again briefly but then went dark again for more than 100 years.

Scientists can't predict how long the comet will be visible this time, Gibb said, but it was still bright early in the week. The comet circles the sun about every seven years.

"Comets are fragile, only about as dense as a snowdrift," she said.

Sometimes pieces break off, and sunlight bouncing off the new material can brighten things up a bit, but it is unusual for the brightness to change so dramatically, Gibb said.

Gibb learned about the comet's transformation quickly, and she and her colleagues almost immediately began applying for time to study the object using high-tech telescopes around the world.

"There are trillions and trillions of comets in the outer parts of the solar system, and so far we've only studied a few dozen,"

Gibb said.

So far, the scientists have learned that the comet contains organic chemicals and water, she said. They are analyzing data now and hope to report their findings in the coming months.

Steve Taylor, an amateur astronomer and member of the St. Louis Astronomical Society, learned about the comet from the group.

He located the object quickly with just his eyes, he said. The comet appears as a bright, fuzzy star to the naked eye, Taylor said.

The comet is round and doesn't appear to have a tail, although recent images suggest it is developing one, Gibb said.

But Taylor said skywatchers who grabbed a pair of binoculars or peeked through a telescope wouldn't be disappointed by the tailless comet.

"It looks like a big bull's-eye in the sky."

Northwest can finish a perfect conference schedule for 2nd straight year with win

By Brett Berger
University Sports Editor

When Bart Tatum arrived at Missouri Southern after the 2005 national championship, he had one message for his new team.

"The worst thing you can do is look behind you."

That's good advice for a team that had endured tragedy with the death of coach John War, who was found dead in his office in Sept. 2005. On top of that, the Lions hadn't had a winning season since 1997 and hadn't tasted glory since 1993 when future NFL stars Rod Smith and James Thrash led the Lions to their only MIAA championship.

"I don't think people truly understand when you talk about five to six coaches in a 10-year period, the death of a coach, 10-straight losing records. It's a very steep hill to climb," Tatum said.

In Tatum's second season, the Lions are 6-4 and clinched a winning season with a 55-24 victory last Saturday against Truman State.

"That's why the good Lord put eyeballs in front of our heads instead of behind our heads," Tatum said. "We focus on the future and we don't talk about the past ever. We talk about what our goals are and having a winning season was the first stepping stone and that's in the books."

"We're still climbing, make no mistake about that, but it was a very difficult last winning more than we lost this year."

Missouri Southern has no shot at a playoff bid but could put a damper on Northwest coach Mel Tjeerdsma's bid for 200-career wins, and a possible first-round bye in the upcoming Division II playoffs.

"After watching film, it's a little scary. They're good on defense."

Exhibition ends in loss Loss points out needed improvements as season opener approaches in one week

By Scott Levine
Sports Editor

The Northwest women's basketball team saw an early lead quickly evaporate during last Saturday's 83-63 exhibition loss to Illinois State.

Lauren Williams' two free throws gave the Bearcats a 9-6 advantage, before Illinois State's Tiffany Hudson cut the deficit to one with 15:00 left in the first half. Hudson gave the Redbirds the lead for good when she converted three free throws with 14:58 remaining.

Senior captain April Miller said the game served as a test to see what the team needs to work on for the future.

"The game definitely magnified our weaknesses," Miller said. "They were physical, but we kept in there. I felt when we were clicking, it showed what our potential was."

Mandi Schumacher's layup with 11:35 left in the first half cut Illinois State's lead to 17-16. That was as close as Northwest would come for rest of the game. The Redbirds closed the first half on a 30-16 run, giving them a 47-32 halftime advantage.

"From the (Illinois State) game, I feel that our transition defense needs to get better," senior captain

Kelli Nelson said. "We've worked on it through drills in the offseason, but this game showed we still need work."

After Northwest fell behind by as many as 18 points in the second half, Schumacher nailed a lay-up cutting the deficit to 68-55 with six minutes remaining.

However, Schumacher missed her free throw attempt, and Illinois State closed the contest on a 15-8 run.

Illinois State's All-MVC guard Kristi Cirone registered 27 points, while Shala Jackson came off the bench and added 16 points and six rebounds.

Meghan Brue led the 'Cats in scoring with 17 points on 8-of-14 shooting. Brue added six rebounds, while Jessica Burton hauled in eight rebounds and totaled 12 points. Schumacher and Andrea Dill added nine points apiece.

Northwest coach Gene Steimeyer missed the contest because he attended a memorial service. Northwest opens the regular season at 5:30 p.m. Nov. 16, at home against Avila University during the Wintstead-Reeves Classic.

Tjeerdsma nears milestone in regular season finale

By Brett Berger
University Sports Editor

Northwest coach Mel Tjeerdsma doesn't like competing against former coaches, but Saturday, a former player and assistant coach stands between him and history.

With a win Saturday against Missouri Southern, Tjeerdsma can become the 12th active NCAA coach with 200 career wins. Southern coach Bart Tatum played running back for Tjeerdsma at Austin College and was a Northwest assistant coach from 1994 to 2005.

"I don't like competing against people that have been my coaches, but that's part of the business," Tjeerdsma said. "Once the game starts, you don't worry about it. I really don't think about it that way. It's just another game to get ready for."

Before coming to Northwest, Tjeerdsma went 59-38 in nine seasons at NAIA-affiliated Austin College. When Tjeerdsma arrived at Northwest in 1994, the Bearcats hadn't won a playoff game in two appearances. Tatum remembers how Tjeerdsma kept the staff upbeat about the future as the team endured through an 0-11 season.

"Mel Tjeerdsma set the ultimate example in terms of having poise, class and character," Tatum said. "It (1994) was tough. He never turned into a finger pointer. He was always positive and all the things he needed to do, he did to keep the spirits up and in the right direction."

Tjeerdsma downplayed the upcoming milestone during Tuesday's media luncheon, saying the win means he has "just been coaching for a long time." Never known to be a man that takes all the credit for the 19 postseason victories, nine MIAA championships and two national titles he's brought to Northwest, he instead chalked up his successful career to coaching staffs of the past and present.

"I guess it means I've been blessed to be in this profession as long as I have and to be in a good situation," Tjeerdsma said. "There aren't a lot of places where you get to play 14 to 15 games a year like we've done. I've been around great coaches and SETTER KATIE SWENSON recorded 33 set assists in Northwest's 3-0 season-ending loss to Emporia State, Tuesday.

Slow start sends team packing for season

By Marcus Meade

The Northwest volleyball team played its final match of the season in the same way it played many others. They started slow and played great at times, but it just wasn't enough.

The Bearcats lost to No. 15 Emporia State 3-0, Tuesday, in the first round of the MIAA tournament.

"It's always tough leaving a season not playing as well as you can," Northwest coach Anna Tool said.

The team's biggest problem statistically was its inconsistent attack. Northwest posted its third lowest hitting efficiency of the season at .068. They had a total of 28 errors.

The general consensus was the 'Cats just weren't clicking.

"We just didn't come out and communicate as well as we did last time," outside hitter Alicia Johnson said. "I think we were trying too hard to hit certain spots and forgetting fundamentals."

Johnson led the team with 11 kills along with outside hitter Rachel Nisi. Setter Katie Swenson notched 33 set assists while libero Paige Spangenberg added 22 digs.

Though players like Johnson, Swenson and Spangenberg will be back next season, this was the final match for lone senior Nicole Wojtowicz. Wojtowicz, a defensive specialist, compiled 955 digs in her career at Northwest.

"It's sad to be done, but overall it's been a really good season," Wojtowicz said. "If anything I'm glad we improved over the course of the season."

Northwest finished this season with a 17-17 record, its first non-winning season since 2000, and showed improvement over last year, Tool said.

The team's best stretch came in September when it defeated No. 18 Nebraska-Omaha and nearly ranked South Dakota.

As for their first round loss to Emporia, Wojtowicz summed it up simply.

"Some nights you're on. Some nights you're off," Wojtowicz said. "Tonight was kind of an off night at the wrong time."

Rugby a hit in 1st season at Northwest

A NORTHWEST RUGBY player attempts a lateral in their match against Benedictine (Kan.) last Saturday at Bearcat Stadium. This is the first year for Rugby as a club sport at Northwest.

Former athletes find new niche with new club sport as fall season comes to a close

By Jared Clarke
Missourian Reporter

In a school where football reigns supreme, the Northwest Rugby Club is starting to draw attention to a sport that most Northwest and Maryville community members know little about.

This year marks the inaugural season for the Northwest Rugby Club. The club was created by a group of students and is composed of volunteers who wanted to learn and play the game.

With the help of community businesses and student organizations, the club has built a solid group of players.

Maryville businesses sponsoring the team include U.S. Bank, Carter's Pharmacy, Dominos, Pizzeria, Hy-Vee and Molly's. After getting sponsors around the community, the club put flyers up around campus to get the word out.

"It was a joint effort to spread the word," senior player Nick Triche said. "Our best way to spread the word was by word of mouth and Facebook."

Ninety percent of the players on the team this season had never played rugby, Triche said. Many were looking for an alternative to football.

"You get a lot of athletes from high school that come to Northwest who can't participate in the varsity sports," Triche said. "Rugby gives them an alternative, besides intramurals, where they can come out and showcase what they've got."

Rugby is similar to football, but has many different rules and aspects of the game. Many believe that football is harder and more intense than rugby, but when you put both sports side-by-side, one could argue that rugby is just as tough, if not tougher than football, Triche said.

"We are out on the field for 80 minutes solid, no pads, no breaks, and no timeouts, just giving it all we've got," Triche said. "In football, a down is usually an average of a minute and a half, while we are running nonstop."

Sept. 8 marked the first game ever for the Northwest Rugby team, as they took on UNO at Bearcat Stadium. Although the team is still looking for their first win, they are in the building process.

"We are young and are not up to par with different clubs because of our inexperience, but our athleticism is up there and our enthusiasm for the game is high," co-team captain Paul Zimmerman said.

On Saturday, the rugby club matched up against Benedictine University at Bearcat Stadium. It was their third home match of the season. Despite being defeated 57-7, Northwest outplayed Benedictine in the second half. The club believes it made strides toward the future.

One accomplishment that came from the game on Saturday was finding coaches. David Richardson and Fernando Heredia were unofficially named as coaches for the team.

"Finding coaches is huge for the team's success," Zimmerman said. "Now we can worry about other things like recruiting and the whole logistics of the team. We can make the team a lot more organized."

Richardson, an assistant physics professor at Northwest, is also a sponsor for the team. He had experience playing rugby in high school and college in England and decided to advise the team.

Heredia recently moved to Maryville from California. He played rugby professionally for 12 years, including time playing on the Venezuelan national team. Heredia heard about Northwest Rugby about a week ago and decided to get involved.

Now that it has coaches, the Northwest Rugby Club is excited to see what they can do in their upcoming season, which begins in March.

Northwest Rugby has one more game this season against Pittsburg State. The game begins at 2 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 17 in Olathe, Kan.

Anyone interested in joining the team for next season, you can contact the Northwest Rugby Club at Rugby@nwmissourian.edu and check out its Facebook group "Northwest Rugby Club" for additional information.

Training will begin indoors in January after winter break.

great staffs, both here and at Austin College and it all has fit together."

There has been little turnover in the coaching staff at Northwest. Defensive Coordinator Scott Bostwick has been with Tjeerdsmas since his arrival in 1994. Assistant coach Will Wagner is in his eighth season.

"The continuity of our staff has been key. We just don't have any turnover in our staff," Tjeerdsmas said. "That's important on the field and in recruiting, because the same guys recruiting the same school year after year and that makes a lot of difference."

Adam Dorrel, in his first season as the offensive coordinator and fourth overall, said Tjeerdsmas has been more than a football coach. "The thing about him that people don't get to see is that he cares about these guys outside of football," Dorrel said, who played offensive lineman for Tjeerdsmas from 1994 to 1997. "He taught us a lot about life and life skills that I use every day, hard work, discipline."

Tjeerdsmas can also become the third active coach this season to reach the 200-win plateau, joining Ohio State's Jim Tressel and Virginia Tech's Frank Beamer. While Tressel and Beamer are more high-profile coaches, Tjeerdsmas doesn't regret staying at Northwest, despite Division I coaching jobs that have come across his desk.

"This has been a great situation. We feel like this is a great place to be and this is where I'm supposed to be," Tjeerdsmas said. "I don't have any regrets at all. When you look at where our program is and where it was in 1994, you get a good feeling about what has happened here."

"And what's happened in this community and our University and how football has become a high profile thing and I think it's carried over in a lot of ways."

Should another upper-level job show up, Tjeerdsmas said he wouldn't give it a second thought.

"You don't have to worry about that," Tjeerdsmas said with a chuckle. "There are a lot of young coaches out there that are going to be a lot more interesting than me."

TATUM: No. 1 defense awaits 'Cats

They're a good football team, but they're really impressive on defense," Tjeerdsmas said. "He'll have them ready to play. Sometimes, the last game of the year when we're in a situation like we are when we've got a lot to play for, a lot of teams are ready to shut it down, but this won't be the case with them. We're going to have to be ready for a tough 60 minute football game."

Southern's defense is No. 1 in the MIAA in total defense, allowing 281.3 yards per game. This doesn't bode well for a Northwest offense that committed four turnovers in a 24-7 victory last Saturday. In that game, Joel Osborn threw four interceptions, three of which were tipped by Emporia or Northwest. The team was wide-out Sydney Brisbane, who didn't travel with the team.

"We just took the best 54 plays today and we evaluate that at every position every week," Tjeerdsmas said, when asked why Falkner and Brisbane didn't make the trip.

When asked about the problems within the receiving corps, senior tight end Mike Peterson wouldn't point fingers at specific people, but said it's about doing the little things in practice.

"I'm not going to single anybody out, but everybody, no matter what it is, whatever what play it is, knowing what route to run, that's a little part of it," Peterson said, who had 5 catches for 60 yards and a touchdown last Saturday. "But, it's about doing the little things and showing a lot of effort. This is something we build on every week and you got to try to learn to prepare, no matter who it is."

Missouri Southern's offense is anchored by Louisiana State transfer running back Alley Broussard. Broussard has 853 yards and 12 touchdowns. Broussard received national attention when he was featured in a story on SI.com Oct. about small school players who have high-pick draft potential.

Quarterback Adam Hinspeter has 17 touchdowns passes and is a player defensive end Tyler Northway says the defense wants to key on. Northway had a six tackles and a sack last Saturday.

"We're going to have to get some hits and bring him to the turf, to make sure he knows he's going to feel pressure the whole game," Northway said.

SPOOFHOUNDS

MHS FOOTBALL

Format set to change after claiming final victim

By Sam Robinson
Community Sports Editor

This was not the plan. Three weeks ago, the Maryville football team was 7-0 and ranked No. 4 in the state and poised to achieve its goal of making the playoffs.

Now, after losing just one game by one touchdown, the Spoofhounds' lockers are cleaned out with the members of the MEC champion-squad watching several schools with inferior marks play for the title they once coveted.

The 2007 'Hounds belong to a special fraternity in the state of Missouri. A bond they share with Class 6 Blue Springs South (9-1), who was ranked No. 1 and in the nation's Top 10 for nearly the entire season, only to lose its final regular season game to Rockhurst last week.

Instead of rewarding teams for their play in each of their 10 games, Missouri's district system renders the first seven contests inconsequential. Conference championships and undefeated records are thrown out the window as playoff appearances are decided in three games.

Senior quarterback Andy Walter said this format would've served the 'Hounds better if they had lost their first seven and won just three games.

"I was saying the other day that we could've gone 0-7 then won our three district games," Walter said. "Then we would've been a 3-7 team and be in the playoffs."

While the 'Hounds and Jaguars are now entrenched as examples of a potentially flawed system, the Lawson Cardinals played 3-7 Carrollton, who got into the playoffs under Walter's scenario, in the first round of the playoffs.

Coach Chris Holt, who has been on the wrong end of this not-so-rare scenario before, said he went 9-1 at Princeton in 2005, said Carrollton merely took advantage of its circumstances.

"That's the system we have," Holt said. "I guess you've got to be congratulatory to them. They won the games they had to win, we didn't."

Missouri's three district games format is just one of the many utilized across the country. Iowa, for example, has eight teams per district with the top two squads advancing to the playoffs. Holt said a system like this would make a lot more sense as eight games would count toward the playoffs instead of just three.

"I just think it would allow your whole season to mean something instead of just a few games," he said. "That's the biggest flaw in our system."

Missouri's reluctance to introduce a format where nearly all games are district games stems from the state not wanting to de-value conference play. Teams in the aforementioned formats don't play for conference titles as everything is geared toward districts and the postseason.

While too late for this year's seniors and recent Maryville teams who were victims of loaded districts, the current system is getting amended in time for next season. Two teams will now advance from each district, meaning the playoffs will double in size.

This does not sit well with one

MARYVILLE IS ONE of two teams to be left out of the postseason with one loss. The Spoofhounds won the MEC crown with a perfect mark and fell to No. 1 Lawson 28-20 during their lone loss.

Maryville senior, who knows he missed his chance.

"It's kind of upsetting," linebacker Tyler Oglesby said. "It's very upsetting actually to know that next year they're going to take two teams from each district. It's really tough, you can't really put words to the feeling."

While it will limit the amount of 9-1 teams kept out of the postseason, the new system is not without flaws. Although it comes a year too late for a team that saw one quarter erase a decade's worth of work, it will likely give the 2008 team a long overdue opportunity.

"You're going to get a lot more schools in," Holt said. "The difference is, if we'd played Lawson in week 10 and they beat us, theoretically you'd play them again in two games so I don't like that aspect of it. But at least you'd have the opportunity to play them again."

"Their argument's going to be, 'we already beat you, we shouldn't have to beat you twice.' I can see that too. I don't think the one we have now's great and I don't think the one we're going to have next year is going to be great either. I think every one of them (district formats) has their pluses and minuses."

Grade Card

Name: MHS Football

Offense:

B+ Quarterbacks

Andy Walter took a step forward in his senior season, throwing 12 touchdowns passes. His season's best stretch came at the end of MEC play when he connected on 90 percent of his passes at Platt County and threw for four touchdowns the next week against Savannah.

A Running backs

Not sure there was a more solid group than this one. Junior Adam Mattson rushed for 1,241 yards and 17 touchdowns and won the MEC rushing title. The lone loss to Lawson could not be blamed on Mattson as he rushed for 139 yards in that game. Senior Malcom Swinford battled a hamstring injury but still managed to score six touchdowns, while his backup John Farmer scored three touchdowns and two against Bishop LeBlond. Following Swinford's injury, fullback Tyler Oglesby was generally the second option behind Mattson and rushed for four touchdowns of over 30 yards.

B Receivers

When this group got their chances, which was rare, they usually made the most of them. Tanner Archer scored two touchdowns in one quarter against Smithville, while Cory Cronk came on at the end of the season, catching a crucial 54-yard touchdown pass against Platt County. Overall this group's production was limited as the running game was usually the focal point of the 'Hounds' attack.

A Offensive Line

The unsung heroes of this team had a tremendous year paving holes for Mattson and protecting Walter. Curtis Cronk, Dillon Owens, Tanner Walter, Spencer Twaddle and Chayse Barr helped the offense score 30 points in seven of the 10 games, including two 56-point games.

Defense:

A Defensive Line

Consistently terrorized opposing quarterbacks, while stifling rushing attacks all season long. The one black mark on this group was the Lawson game as the Cardinals rushed for 176 yards and three touchdowns. Defensive tackles Zack Sherry and Jason Davis were constantly in opponents' backfields, accumulating several tackles for losses. Sherry notched two sacks against Platt County while Lake Lancaster's fourth-quarter sack killed the 'Hounds' momentum and sealed the victory. Sherry also returned an INT 84 yards for a touchdown against Savannah for this group's lone score.

B Linebackers

More unsung heroes resided with this group as, with the exception of the first quarter against Chillicothe and the third against Lawson, opposing run games were usually non-factors. Cory Cronk scored this group's lone touchdown when he returned an interception against Cameron. Oglesby's return from an injury in week three energized this group, which stymied potent offenses like Chillicothe and Platt County. Cameron's spread attack and Lawson's wing-T did some damage to this otherwise solid unit.

A Defensive backs

This accounted for 10 INTs on the year as the secondary was usually a no-fly zone for opposing receivers. Archer, Charlie Love and Derek Johns shut down two Division II-bound players as they kept Smithville tight end Andrew Jones in check and for the most part contained the passing attack of Lawson's Joseph Kassaravoud. Love and Archer each picked off four passes and both had games with two INTs. One of Johns' two picks preserved a victory against Benton, while Archer's goal-line tackle prevented Chillicothe from tying the game on opening night.

NWMSU and MHS Athletes of the Week

Omon

The senior running back from Beatrice, Neb., rushed for 230 yards and two touchdowns in a 24-7 victory over Emporia State and is now third all-time on the MIAA's scoring list.

O'Brien

The junior from Easton, Mo., finished ninth in Saturday's NCAA South Central Regional in Joplin. Her time of 22:09.7 broke a school record.

Mattson

The junior running back rushed for a season-high 224 yards and a touchdown. Mattson finished the year with 1,241 yards and 17 TDs.

Jones

The sophomore finished the 5K in 22:53, which was good enough for 79th out of 168 runners at the state meet.

Screwy system clouds playoff picture

Scott Levine
Sports Editor

I should have been doing something much more productive last night than looking at what college football game would screw up my weekly picks again. But no, I was forced to sit, staring at my computer screen looking at spreads destined to screw me over again.

So why was I not doing anything more productive? Because the Missouri State High School Athletics Association said I couldn't. That's right, I should have been helping Community Sports Editor Sam Robinson cover Maryville's first round football game Wednesday, but instead, I was forced to join the rest of Maryville watching teams with 3-7 records make the playoffs, while the Spoofhounds finished 9-1.

How in the world does the state association expect a coach to tell his 9-1 team that they weren't good enough to get into the playoffs, but Joe Blow's team down the road was good enough to have an impressive 3-7 mark?

Well I guess the association's brain trust is allowing more teams into the playoffs next year, but it seems a little outdated. In fact the whole system is outdated.

To make matters better, the state has decided to allow half the teams in each district to make the playoffs. A nice gesture, but a little overdone. The main problem is allowing teams with below .500 records into the playoffs, while keeping teams with one or two losses out.

Next year's system will not remedy that situation, it will only allow more good and bad teams in.

The state should take some advice from their neighbors to the north — Iowa. A great state if I may add.

In Iowa, the state is divided into eight districts, with eight teams battling it out in each district. The top two finishers in each district advance to the playoffs. In the biggest class, there are only 48 teams, split into seven conferences. Each winner automatically receives a bid, while nine others receive bids based on a points system.

Now wouldn't that work much better than the current or future system? No teams would make the playoffs with below .500 records and generally the best 16 teams would make the playoffs.

Some people may be asking, "but Scott, the distances would be too far."

If you're from Maryville, slap yourself. Anyone involved with this football team would be glad to drive over two hours if it meant they would be given a fair shot at the playoffs.

People may also be saying that district play is the beginning of the playoffs. Of course your district could include the four best teams in the state, compared to another district football team goes to the playoffs purely on a tiebreaker and eventually wins the state championship, come talk to me about district play being a fair barometer as to what team is Missouri's best.

To get a true state champion, Missouri needs to change its system. If it doesn't, teams with sub-par records will continue to cloud Missouri's playoff picture, and the BCS will start looking much more appealing.

SPORTS BATTLE PICKS

Scott's picks
Prediction Record (19-13)
NCAA Lock
Texas Tech at Texas — Texas
Texas trails by 40 points entering the fourth quarter until Jamaal Charles lights up the Red Raider defense for 300 yards and six scores as the Longhorns rally again for another big victory.

NCAA Upset Alert
Colorado at Iowa State — Iowa State
I've been waiting all year to pick my beloved Cyclones. I was going to choose them to dethrone Iowa, but Marc thought Iowa was God's gift to football, which is typical to find in Hawk fans. However, Marc is not a Hawk fan, so the disease that afflicts these fans must run rampant in other parts of the nation, too. Iowa State will at least cover the spread, but I think they'll ride the momentum of last week's win to defeat the Buffs this week.

NFL Lock
Cleveland at Pittsburgh — Pittsburgh
Cleveland is much improved, but they aren't ready to win in Pittsburgh, yet. The only chance the Browns have in this game is if the Steelers aren't rested enough after playing on Monday night.

NFL Upset Alert
Buffalo at Miami — Miami
It has to happen sooner or later. I love teams coming off a bye week, and I hate teams that are looking at a big prime time match-up in the next week. Well since Miami's coming off a bye week, and the Bills face New England next week on prime time, this basically falls into the lock category, at least in my mind.

Brett's picks
Prediction Record (14-18)
NCAA Lock
Auburn at Georgia — Georgia
Georgia is superior to Auburn in passing and rushing. Passing will be the key as Georgia takes care of Auburn. Georgia needs win to inch closer to SEC championship berth. Pretty much two boring teams.

NCAA Upset Alert
Kansas at Oklahoma State — Oklahoma State
I'm going to pick against Kansas the rest of this season. They've got to lose sometime. Seriously, Kansas isn't that good and nobody in this game, which is typical they upset Missouri at Arrowhead. Todd Reesing isn't a Heisman Trophy candidate, so let's derail that train immediately. Oklahoma State has shown they can hang with the elite teams in the Big 12.

NFL Lock
Indianapolis at San Diego — Indianapolis
San Diego reverted back to the team that started the season 1-3. Adrian Peterson ran all over the Chargers, so expect Joseph Addai to do the same thing. Phillip Rivers needs to play better so the team can rely less on LT's legs. This is a must-win for the Chargers if they have any shot at making the playoffs.

NFL Upset Alert
Minnesota at Green Bay — Minnesota
Vikings have dug too big of a hole to make some noise in the NFC North, but both teams are playing well and this should be a shootout. Adrian Peterson should be enough to upset the Packers. Packers could make it interesting, but Vikings edge the Packers in historic Lambeau Field.

Sam's picks
Prediction Record (13-19)
NCAA Lock
Wake Forest at Clemson — Clemson
As long as the Tigers don't come out in those horrid purple jerseys, this should be fine. Wake Forest choked at UVA last week, and won't be able to go into Death Valley and win. The Demon Deacons took one for the week and will continue that trend coming up.

NCAA Upset Alert
Indiana at Northwestern — Northwestern
The Hoosiers are not much of a road team and the Wildcats...I don't know anything about this game. I confess. It's a two-point spread and I'm just winging it.

NFL Lock
San Francisco at Seattle — Seattle
If you think the AFC West is bad, try this: the Seahawks are still leading the NFC West by a whole game. This division is pathetic and has the best chance of any division in my lifetime of its winner finishing below .500. Seattle is pretty bad, but the 49ers are awful. Much to my dismay, the Hawks are fazing my fantasy RB Shaun Alexander out of the offense. As if The Plummerns (my fantasy team) needed more adversity this week. I'm already taking on Brett's 8-1 record without the help of sleeper deluxe Wes Welker, who conveniently has a bye. Oh yeah, Seattle wins.

NFL Upset Alert
Philadelphia at Washington — Eagles
The boys in green need this game badly and Washington is not very good. Donnie McCarroll the bunch aren't going to the playoffs, but the ex-Cue QB will win one for me before heading back home to Chicago next season.

Marc's picks
Prediction Record (18-14)
NCAA Lock
Florida St. at Virginia Tech — VT
The Hokies don't have a dynamite offense, but it's not nearly as bad as Florida State. The defenses will rule in this run-run-pass-punt game. I wouldn't be surprised if the total score is 17-10. That's OK. The Hokies are going to block a punt and run it back. It's Beamer ball baby.

NCAA Upset Alert
Virginia at Miami Fla. — Virginia
Miami's a four point favorite, and I don't really know why. Virginia can stop Miami's inept offense. So, all they need to do is score a couple times and end it. Miami isn't the team it used to be, and their line won't be able to stop Howie Long's son whose name I can't remember.

NFL Lock
Dallas at N.Y. Giants — Dallas
It's time for the Eli Manning falacy to end. He's not a good quarterback. Dallas will prove it. DeMarcus Ware is going to wear himself out helping Manning off the ground. Consequently, Manning will complete plenty of passes to Dallas's secondary. Manning can't play under pressure. He can't beat good teams, and his mother dresses him funny.

NFL Upset Alert
Cincinnati at Baltimore — Cincinnati
I like Baltimore, but they are playing so bad. Cincy isn't good, but they're fortunate enough to get Baltimore at the right time. If Baltimore's offense were a high school kid, they'd be the chess team captain. Ironically, they have roughly the same amount of talent.

WHAT TO WATCH

Scott's TV Picks
Friday
■Louisville at West Virginia, 11 a.m. ESPN Classic — What a great day for football this was in 2005. USC and Notre Dame, Michigan and Penn. St. and this classic all happened on the same day, and came down to the final play.

Days rating (2 of 5)

Saturday
■Kansas at Oklahoma St., 7 p.m. ABC — I've been saying for weeks that Kansas will lose. I even told all my friends to put their college savings on Texas A & M beating Kansas. But I'm finally coming over to the dark side and saying Kansas will win.

Days rating (4 of 5)

Sunday
■Minnesota at Green Bay, noon FOX — Brett Favre dreams of being back in Kansas City after AD nubbles all over him.

Days rating (3 of 5)

Marc's TV Picks
Friday
■American Gladiators, 5 p.m. ESPN Classic — If ESPN Classic is going to keep airing American Gladiators, I'm going to keep watching it. My girl Leo and my man Nitro can't be stopped on the rings, and I love to see weekend warriors try to do it.

Days rating (2 of 5)

Saturday
■Florida St. at Virginia Tech, 2:30 p.m. ABC — I need Virginia Tech to win so I can catch Scott. I love defensive games, and it doesn't get any more defensive than this. As long as Beamer doesn't get preventive defense with five minutes left to go.

Days rating (4 of 5)

Sunday
■Cleveland at Pittsburgh, noon CBS — It's time to see if Cleveland is for real. Big Ben's back, like I knew they would be, and the Steelers are back to Super Bowl form.

Days rating (4 of 5)

Sam's TV Picks
Friday
■Friends, 5 p.m. TBS — "The One with the Worst Best Man Ever." Joey and Chandler lose Ross' ring and wackiness ensues.

Days rating (1 of 5)

Saturday
■Sugar Shane Mosley vs. Miguel Cotto, 9:30 p.m. HBO PPV
This much-anticipated welterweight title showdown could be the fight of the year. Cotto's undefeated resume faces his toughest test as Mosley is the first truly great fighter Cotto has fought.

Days rating (5 of 5)

Sunday
■Cowboys at Giants, 3:15 p.m. Fox — Battle for NFC supremacy. Last week we had the showdown for the likely Super Bowl champion. This winner could emerge as the team that loses to New England or Indy.

Days rating (4 of 5)

Brett's TV Picks
Friday
■Denver at Washington, 7 p.m., ESPN — Denver will have Carmelo Anthony and Allen Iverson for a full season. The Nuggets are off to a great start, while the Wizards have stumbled out of the gates.

Days rating (3 of 5)

Saturday
■No. 1 Ohio State at Illinois, 2:30 p.m. ABC — The Illini have knocked off a couple of Top-25 teams, but nothing would define its season more than an upset of the Buckeyes.

Days rating (4 of 5)

Sunday
■Denver at Kansas City, Noon, CBS — Kansas City is back on CBS where it belongs. The home team always wins in this rivalry, but both teams are pretty even.

WEEKLY HOROSCOPES

Today's Birthday (11-8-07):
You'll learn about negotiations this year, the game of give and take. Always have something you can lose and you'll end up with a profit.

Aries (March 21-April 19):
Today is an 8 — If you go through your holdings carefully, odds are good you'll discover more than you thought you had. That ought to get you motivated.

Taurus (April 20-May 20):
Today is a 7 — There's no point in arguing endlessly with a person who's not listening well. There's no point in letting this person spend your money, either. Be firm.

Gemini (May 21-June 21):
Today is a 7 — You're getting to the place in the game where action is required. If you haven't already, quickly come up with a plan.

Cancer (June 22-July 22):
Today is a 9 — Fantasies can turn to worries, as you add up the costs. Don't get into a tizzy about something that hasn't happened. You can change plans.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22):
Today is a 5 — Be ready to prove your point beyond a shadow of a doubt. Gather your data together and go over it with a fine-toothed comb. Know your stuff.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22):
Today is an 8 — A subject you find fascinating leads you to discover a way to do the job better. This is always a welcome relief. Put in the connection.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22):
Today is a 7 — Share your deepest hopes and dreams with your secret confidant. If you don't know such a person, a diary works well. Sometimes, even better. Get one with a lock.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21):
Today is an 8 — You don't have full agreement, even though you're quite decisive. Listen carefully to the other people's considerations. That may be all they need.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21):
Today is a 6 — You have a way with words, but caution is advised. Don't imply more than you intend to deliver. Be charming, but not a tease.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19):
Today is an 8 — Your time is behind you 100 percent. Will be enough to accomplish what you have in mind? Yeah, but it'll be expensive. Hold on to the purse strings.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18):
Today is a 6 — There's a big test coming up that affects how much money you make. Look sharp and be respectful, appearances matter.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20):
Today is an 8 — Some of your worries are well-founded, but that doesn't mean they get to be in control of your life. With love and faith, you can squash the one that pops up to scare you today.

STROLLER

Your Man loves gambling

The Stroller

I'm in deep. I'm in deep to the point of people you don't want to be in deep with. I have discovered the world of sports gambling, and I love it.

The problem is, it doesn't love me back. You would think my bookie, Guapo, would be my biggest fan.

I bought his beach house, his kids' braces and his wife's laser hair removal (she looked like the Robin Williams version of Sasquatch, that's hairy).

But instead he meets me with anger. Last week, after I lost on a sack race at the Burlington Junction Elementary School Family Fun Day, (damnit, Timmy how could you blow that lead!) Guapo hooked my testicles to a car battery and went "Gimmo" on my ass.

As electricity pumped through my body, ensuring that I will never have children or get an erection ever again, I tried to remember how I made my decent into the land of the degenerate gambler.

It all started with a friend of mine who will remain nameless. This so-called friend was a degenerate gambler himself, and oftentimes did his bookies "favors" to pay off his debts.

My friend came to me with a proposition.

"My man, you want to put some money on a few games this weekend," my friend said.

"Sure," I said. "What's five bucks here and there?"

The next thing I know, I'm selling my mom's Alzheimer's meds to put money on a Beer Pong game in my stepdad's basement. I'd sunk so low, I too was on my knees for Guapo ... praying to him to let me "work off my debt."

No amount of showering can get that feeling off your skin, but someday I may move out of the seventh circle of gambling hell and take up a respectable addiction ... like heroin.

The Stroller has been a tradition since 1918 and does not reflect the views of The Northwest Missourian.

MOVIE REVIEW

'Saw IV' oozes with tons of tacky torture

By Tara Adkins
Features Editor

He still wants to play a game. He still wants to slice and dice, prod and poke until we all finally learn our life lesson. But this game has lasted too long.

Despite his death in the last film, Jigsaw lives on as the mastermind in "Saw IV." He miraculously had the time to devise clever schemes and rusty contraptions while on his deathbed. And he managed to record them all on countless tape recorders, which should make him the new spokesperson for Radio Shack.

I was one of the first in line to see this fourth installment of the franchise that twisted and turned my mind into utter shock. However, "Saw IV" created nothing but utter confusion.

The film starts with a bloody bang as Jigsaw lies dead on the autopsy table. A medical examiner peels back his bloody scalp, drills open his skull and digs around in gray matter for an uncomfortable 10 minutes.

But wait, there's more. Apparently this guy is searching for something as he cracks open Jigsaw's chest, swishes around in intestines and slices into his stomach only to find another cassette tape. This gory mess took place even before the movie title appeared.

So obviously Jigsaw is dead since he sat through his disgusting dissecting. However, he lives on through the torture traps he sets in his tapes. The games have begun. Again.

MUSIC REVIEW

BSB should have stopped with album No. 4

By Sydney Moore
Staff Reporter

Backstreet's back — oh great. I used to like the Backstreet Boys, but that was during the time boy bands were actually popular and they sang cheery ballads about crushes that never turned into anything more and about how the girl next door broke their hearts. But now, the Backstreet Boys are back with their fifth album after a long dry spell. Although the tunes are still mainly about girls and broken hearts, the sound isn't what we all know (and used to love) as Backstreet Boys material.

The title of the album, "Unbreakable," seems a little ironic to me, due to the fact that the Backstreet Boy Kevin didn't join his former band mates on this project, leaving the band somewhat broken. But the four remaining BSBs (or Backstreet Men now?) seem to be very proud of this new album, with or without their fifth member.

As a former boy band fanatic, I'm used to the slow, melodic Backstreet Boys songs like "Quit Playing Games With My Heart" or "All I Have To Give." On "Unbreakable," which came out Oct. 30, the sound is completely different than their four previous albums, with an edgier, not so pop-sound. A few of the tracks feature a slight techno feel, which really killed the mood for me. I'm not a fan of the new sound and just from listening to the album once, I don't think even their most loyal fans will appreciate this album.

Over many years and a few hundred CDs later, I've learned that the best songs are the ones that the artists themselves have a hand in writing. Sadly, the guys from BSB only put their writing skills to work on three of the 14 songs which coincidentally I found to be the three worst songs on the album. Each of the three songs has a mix of techno sound along with the whiny sounds of their raspy voices.

Although I'm definitely not a fan of the new album, I will give one song, "Trouble Is," credit. It was a sort of country sound but it sure beats the techno and Rasta sounds of some of the others.

Hopefully, the guys of BSB don't sell too many albums otherwise they might come back around for a sixth time. And we know no one wants that.

Sydney Moore gives Backstreet Boys "Unbreakable" 2 out of 5 stars.

SHIRTLESS BEARCATS

Warriors in paint

By Brian Johnson
Missourian Reporter

It's game day at Northwest and a renegade group of shirtless, painted students are getting the student section pumped. Believe it or not, this is an official Northwest organization.

Donned in Apple Barrel paint, these painted warriors known as the Shirtless Bearcats, are a prime example of how dedicated Bearcat fans can be.

Since 2005, this group has been a prominent part of Northwest athletics by appearing at games with their shirts off and chests painted in support of the Bearcats. The group has appeared at nearly every football and basketball game since then.

"Our main goal is to get the fans excited at the games," senior Howie Ball said. "We want to promote a positive atmosphere at said events and act as ambassadors for Northwest."

The group's history goes back to the National Championship game in 2005. There, a group of male and female students decided to paint themselves to show support in the Bearcats' biggest game of the season. The following season, the ritual continued.

"We did nearly all the home games and the away games for men and women," senior Scarlet Casey said. "We also traveled to St. Joe and Kansas City for tournaments where the teams did well."

There is a very close bond between all the members of the group when they interact at games. All of them are very close, not just during games, but outside of them as well.

"We all hang out with each other all the time," Casey said. "We go out together, watch games on TV and even room together."

The Shirtless Bearcats also remain very busy when it comes to games. They go to so many games that Casey likes to compare themselves to other college groups that are busy.

"We go to a lot of events together. Usually, two or three of us go to each game," Casey said. "That makes it a lot more fun."

The group has certainly grown in many ways since 2005.

This past year, the rowdy Bearcats were recognized as an official group by Northwest. They received enough money while the group was growing to process for the group that they can now afford to do more to deal with.

Ball said, "It was exciting, but it was a lot of work. We had to get our name on the university's list of official organizations."

Ball said, "It was a lot of work, but it was worth it. We got our name on the list and we can now be an official group."

Shirtless Bearcats is a name to be taken literally. All of the guys are shirtless with letters painted on their chests. The women are also shirtless, but they wear sports bras. Senior Trudy Stensland was reluctant at first to wear such little clothing.

"At first I was nervous," Stensland said. "But after a while you don't even think about it because you have so much fun."

Like all college organizations, there are always expenses. In the Shirtless Bearcats' case, there are expenses in different things like away tickets, transportation and of course, paint. Casey urged anyone to help the group financially if they can through donations.

The group is also selling T-shirts for $10 a piece in order to raise money. Anyone interested in a shirt should contact Stensland.

According to Casey, the group has received some help from the residence hall directors. Anyone interested in donating should know that they're an organized group.

"Since we are an official student organization, we can accept donations," Casey said. "People can rely on us because we always know who's going to be at a game a week in advance as well as painting designs."

Many students may not take a group whose main objectives are to cheer at a game with their shirts off and paint very seriously. Ball could care less. People should see how organized and committed they are, he said.

"When you put yourself out there like we do, everyone will have their own opinion," Ball said. "We just do what we do and have a good time doing it and people who appreciate that will join."

Support for the group has come from all sides. While it does come from other fans attending the games, it also comes from the athletes themselves. The feedback from some players have been positive and it has provided inspiration for many of them.

A lot of basketball players thank us," Stensland said. "They told us it gets them more pumped up and it helps get the fans on their feet."

One of the biggest moments in the group's short history was this Family Day. There was a lot of interest in participating with the group and it gave the group more exposure.

"We had 31 people painted for Family Day," Stensland said. "We were able to spell out 'Northwest Missouri State University'."

The Shirtless Bearcats are always looking for new members. "If anyone is interested in showing support for Bearcat Athletics, the group is open to anyone who wants to join."

"If you want to be part of the action, just shoot us your name and your S number and we will contact you," Ball said. "We are always excited for new members."

So many members, the Shirtless Bearcats will still be there every game. Their dedication to the Northwest Bearcats runs deep even if their paint only lasts for a few hours.
